When Amy purchased Von Curtis Salon two years ago, it was a dream come true. Amy started working as a hairstylist years ago, but she took a hiatus from hairstyling to serve an LDS mission, pursue a career in banking and start a family. Amy worked in banking for 14 years. Home and commercial mortgages became her specialty, which proved helpful when she was thinking about owning a salon. In 2006, everything finally fell into place to purchase the salon at the Shops at Riverwoods. Ever since, Amy's been busier than she ever imagined.

From the beginning, Amy has been highly involved in the day-to-day activities of Von Curtis Salon. She's often at her Provo business for a few hours every day, checking on the hairstylists and the clients.

"I love being able to meet the clients — that is my favorite part," Amy says. "I love people."

All of the hairstylists who work at Von Curtis start out as assistants to other stylists. This practice, which has worked well for Amy, allows stylists to become trained in the ways of the salon and refreshes their skills if they have been away from the business for a while. It also allows new stylists to build up their clientele for their first six months.

Amy remembers how difficult it can be to find clients, so she takes care of her stylists by assisting them in that process.

In addition to the draw of talented stylists, clients come to Von Curtis for hair extensions. Made from natural European hair and attached with an organic bonding agent, the extensions at Von Curtis are some of the best in Utah Valley.

Von Curtis carries Bumble and bumble products — yet another attribute that sets Von Curtis Salon apart.
